

Preface Facial Resurfacing

Mark M. Hamilton, MD, FACS
Guest Editor

It is an honor to serve as the Guest Editor for this edition of the Facial Plastic Surgery Clinics of North America. We are in a period of rapid development of new techniques for enhancing the skin. Our patients are bombarded constantly with information on everything from topical treatments to the newest resurfacing device. Some techniques do indeed offer the possibility of more dramatic results, less discomfort, or less downtime. It is essential that we remain informed to help guide our patients toward those options that are beneficial to them.

In this issue we examine in depth some of the more common skin resurfacing methods, both traditional and cutting edge. I hope we provide you with greater insight into this rapidly evolving area and allow you to offer your patients the best possible information and care.
